The Middle East Institute (MEI) was founded in 1946 by Christian Herter, who would soon be named US Secretary of State, and George Camp Keiser, a Middle East scholar. The Institute was initially an adjunct of Johns Hopkins University-School for Advanced International Studies but was then spun off as an independent non-profit organization. There were no organizations in the Washington area at that time that focused on the contemporary Middle East. MEI was designed to fill the void. The Institute’s charter promised:

“…to increase knowledge of the Middle East among citizens of the United States and to promote a better understanding between the peoples of these two areas.”

This remains the Institute’s objective.

Traditionally, MEI has not taken positions on issues and does not identify with a particular political party or with a specific side on the many disputes that have wracked the region. The Institute continues that policy today. Instead, MEI offers a forum for debate, opinion, and analysis through a variety of educational and informational programs, including briefings and seminars, media outreach, a scholars program, a quarterly peer-reviewed scholarly journal, a language program, a library, and various conferences.

The Institute is supported by individual and corporate members, by individual donors, and by foundations. MEI is a membership organization, but many of its programs are open to the public. Both policy papers and informational resources are available on its website.
To celebrate the Middle East Institute’s 60th anniversary this year, we invited our scholars to look back over the decades and choose the most significant events and personalities that shaped the history of the region. Not surprisingly, their references were most always to a war or to an unresolved conflict. At a time when frustration with US policy is mounting both at home and abroad, MEI is more relevant than ever. Unlike other institutes that have a strong political bias, MEI offers a quality neutral forum for responsible dialogue — whether in addressing the crisis in Iraq or Sudan, peacekeeping in Lebanon or Afghanistan, or the never-ending Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

For MEI’s 60th Anniversary Annual Conference this November, we encouraged participants to look for fresh approaches to the policy debate. Attendance hit an all-time high of 500, compared with MEI’s first annual meeting in 1946, which was attended by fewer than 80. It is a sure sign of the soaring interest and concern for what is happening in the Middle East and the repercussions that events there will have on our national, corporate, and individual interests. The high attendance also reflects the high quality of the panels and the first ever address to MEI by a US cabinet member, Secretary of Energy Samuel Bodman.

For its regular briefings, MEI provided quality speakers who put the current conflicts into proper context. We intensified our efforts to reach into the American heartland through C-Span coverage and videoconference links for remote audiences, including the University of Texas at Austin and Portland State University.

We continued to build on MEI’s reputation as a reliable source of analysis and commentary. Our scholars were in high demand. They fielded more than 3,000 queries from leading newspapers, magazines, and broadcast networks from around the globe. Op-eds by MEI scholars appeared in major media in key US and Middle East markets. Our scholars and staff also reached out to new audiences through their participation in conferences, speaking engagements, and reporting trips to the region.

The Middle East Journal, which is publishing its 61st edition in 2007, increased its advertising revenues by 20% this past year. Newsstands sales were also up by 15% in 2006. The editors launched a CD series of past MEJ articles on relevant topics to be sold at MEI lectures and other events. MEJ articles are now for sale on the website.

MEI’s Language and Area Studies Department achieved a milestone at the start of 2006, winning accreditation as a post-secondary education institute through the Accrediting Council for Continuing Education and Training. The department enrolled more than 1,000 students in 2006 for Arabic, Hebrew, Turkish, and Persian language classes, including many government employees. We need to find more space to accommodate the growing number of students.

Under the leadership of new Executive Director Trudi Rishikof, the Sultan Qaboos Cultural Center continued to expand its activities, including a popular summer lecture series on Gulf heritage and a project that brought a visiting Omani librarian who spent three months cataloguing the Omani holdings of the George Camp Keiser Library.

The Board of Governors named Ambassador Wendy Chamberlin as President following the July 2006 retirement of Ambassador Edward S. Walker. Ambassador Chamberlin was Deputy High Commissioner for the UN High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) where she spearheaded humanitarian missions during several emergencies, including the crisis in Darfur and South Sudan. Before that, Ambassador Chamberlin was Assistant Administrator in the Asia-Near East Bureau for the US Agency for International Development (USAID) from 2002 to 2004, where she led USAID reconstruction projects in Iraq and pioneered both private and public sector partnerships to support Islamic education in the Middle East and East Asia. She was US Ambassador to Pakistan in 2001-2002. Ambassador Chamberlin brings energy and experience to MEI and a commitment to our mission.

Serious challenges at age 60 are to expand both our funding and member base. Never has MEI been more necessary to help assure that debates about the Middle East are based on objective scholarship and in-country experience. Otherwise, ideological and special agendas will dominate. There is nothing wrong with passion in pursuing knowledge; I have been passionate about this region since I first turned my studies in that direction in 1962. But uninformed passion is a dangerous ingredient that creates demeaning stereotypes of other peoples. It also prepares the ground for policy blunders.

With greater resources, there is still much that MEI can do to educate Americans about the complexities and conflicts of the Middle East and to break down the barriers of misunderstanding. We welcome your support.

MEI Programs

Striking a balance between coverage of both pressing conflict zones and areas of traditional interest, MEI programming in 2006 covered diverse topics ranging from Iraq to Hizbullah, from Sudan to US interests in the South Caucasus. MEI continues to serve as a source of information on the Middle East for academics, analysts, the media, and policy-makers both in Washington and across the country. Through our conferences, panel discussions, book launches, corporate briefings, and policy programs, in 2006 MEI remained an important forum for discussion of some of the most difficult yet significant topics affecting global stability.

Like all print publications, The Middle East Journal has faced a certain amount of erosion in circulation in recent years, though it has maintained its circulation levels better than many comparable publications. In order to compensate for rising print costs and softening circulation levels, the Journal in 2006 actively sought to increase revenues from multiple sources, as well as to employ a longer-term strategy to increase its availability in electronic media. The Journal, which completed its 60th volume at the end of 2006, also planned to capitalize on its 60th anniversary throughout 2007.

During 2006, active promotion of advertising and the use of incentive rates for MEI’s Corporate members saw advertising revenue increase by 20%. The Journal’s newsstand presence also improved its sell-through rate by over 15%.

Recognizing that one of the Journal’s strengths is its 60-year history and archive, the Journal began offering CDs containing articles on a given subject in Adobe Acrobat format. These CDs, on topics such as Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, etc., were offered for sale both through our website and at the MEI Annual Conference and other gatherings. They have provided an additional (if relatively modest) revenue source. In addition, we have begun offering individual recent articles for sale through our website. During the coming year we also will be increasing our availability through electronic information services and hope, in the fairly near term, to be able to offer articles from our past archives for sale.

In terms of content, the Journal continued to seek challenging articles on subjects of contemporary interest. Such articles as Thomas Hegghammer’s “Global Jihadism After the Iraq War” (Winter), Mustafa Kibaroglu’s “Good for the Shah, Banned for the Mullahs: The West and Iran’s Quest for Nuclear Power” (Spring) and, in the Autumn issue, immediately after the Israel-Hizbullah war of summer 2006, articles on Israeli national security decision-making and on the Shi’ite villages in Palestine claimed by Lebanon, all served as a reminder that the Journal provides policy-relevant research alongside more traditional historical and political science scholarship.

Calabrese, Publication Assistant Nancy Wood, Circulation Assistant Lisa

tions.

Articles in Volume 60, Number 4, Autumn 2006
Increasing student demand in 2006 led to the largest annual number of students — 1,063 — ever enrolled in the Middle East Institute’s Department of Languages and Regional Studies; we had 314 students in winter, 229 in spring, 223 in summer, and 297 in our fall session. This is the first time we exceeded 1,000 students in any given year. Of the total, 72% were in Arabic classes, 16% in Farsi, 5% in Turkish, and 4% in Hebrew.

The Department of Languages and Regional Studies increased tuition by $30 for language classes (from $365 to $395, amounting to an 8.2% increase) and $45 for regional studies courses (from $200 to $245, amounting to 22.5%). After six years without tuition increases, this moderate increase was applied in the Fall 2006 quarter. Our decision was based on careful research of language programs in the Washington, DC area. Meanwhile, as a result of the high attrition rate of the teachers, we raised the average hourly rate for teachers by about five dollars an hour. Thus, in the Fall 2005 quarter the average hourly rate was $26, and in the Summer 2006 quarter the average hourly rate amounted to $31.23.

Perhaps the major constraint on further growth of our language program is lack of space. We are already overcrowded during the hours of 6:00 pm to 10:00 pm when most of our language classes take place, utilizing all available spaces including the office of the MEI President. We are seeking additional sites near MEI for classrooms. We are also considering making more than occasional use of MEI facilities on weekends.

Other changes are underway or being studied as a result of the long overdue accreditation in December 2005 of our language classes for continuing education. Shortly after being notified by the Accrediting Council for Continuing Education & Training (ACCET) of the accreditation decision, we began a process of identifying means and methods to capitalize on this achievement. This includes the following: obtaining final, official “degree granting” status from the DC Department of Education; creating a consortium with other institutions of higher education; looking into receiving grants from the Department of Education and other governmental agencies to enhance our language program; and making efforts to organize MEI language classes at government facilities or other private institutions during the workday when space at MEI is unavailable.

Sultan Qaboos Cultural Center

The Sultan Qaboos Cultural Center (SQCC) completed its first full year of operation at the end of 2006. In addition to getting established, SQCC launched a number of cultural and educational programs supporting its mission “to educate the people of America and the Gulf Region about the breadth and richness of each of our cultures, to promote understanding between our peoples, and to educate a new generation of culturally-sensitive and knowledgeable citizens in each society.”

The featured 2006 cultural lecture was given by H.E. Abdullah Abbas, Chairman of the Municipality of Muscat, who spoke at the World Bank on “Muscat, Sultanate of Oman: Reality and Ambitions of City Preservation and Development,” discussing the dramatic transformation of Muscat from a medieval village into a 21st century city in just 35 years. Other 2006 events included a calligraphy workshop covered by The Washington Post, and representation at the National Council of Social Studies Conference in Washington.

As part of the Center’s educational outreach, a 10-week Summer Institute on Oman and the Gulf was held for undergraduate and graduate Washington interns. Experts included John Duke Anthony, Professor Edmund Ghareeb, Dr. Amer Al-Rawas, and journalist Georgie Anne Geyer, among others. Earlier in the year, two groups of high school students visited the Omani Embassy to learn about both Oman and how an embassy operates in the nation’s capital. In the fall, SQCC produced a social studies lesson plan entitled “US Maritime History in the 19th Century: The Peacock and the Treaty of Muscat,” intended for use by middle and high-school teachers, including at the Advanced Placement level.

SQCC Library Fellow Bader bin Mohammed al-Maskari arrived in November to assist the MEI library with developing a special section on Oman and cataloging the Arabic collection. A librarian at the Sultan Qaboos Grand Mosque Library in Muscat, he has strengthened ties between the MEI library and libraries in Oman.

As part of our outreach efforts, the Center has developed a comprehensive and user-friendly website, www.sqcc.org, that serves as a portal to information and cultural exchange about Oman and the Gulf Region. It includes country facts and figures, suggested readings, transcripts from Summer Institute speakers, museums and libraries, lesson plans for teachers, student-oriented material, and information about the many SQCC events and programs — past, present, and future.

The Sultan Qaboos Cultural Center is a program of the Middle East Institute, governed by a US-Omani Board of Oversight chaired by H.E. Hunaina Sultan Al-Mughairy, Omani Ambassador to the United States. Trudi Rishikof serves as Executive Director. Mubarak bin Salim Al-Busaidi, Deputy Executive Director, was appointed by the Ministry of the Diwan of the Royal Court in Muscat.

The George Camp Keiser Library

The library hosted for three months Bader bin Mohammed Al-Maskari, a library fellow sponsored by the government of Oman. Thanks to Mr. Al-Maskari’s efforts, our collection of Arabic books on Oman has been evaluated. We now have an entire section of our library devoted solely to our Omani collection. The library intends on keeping in close contact with Mr. Al-Maskari and hopes that the Omani section he arranged will found the cornerstone to a much larger collection of items pertinent to Oman and its region.

The presence of an additional professional librarian covering the desk part-time allowed the George Camp Keiser’s librarian, Simon Braune, to continue to de-acquisition material. He also was able to re-shift significant portions of our collection, thus providing the library with greater space, particularly on the third floor. The library’s video collection, formerly inaccessible to patrons, is now located on the first floor.

In September the library resumed participating in the Middle East Institute’s Leadership Development Program. The fall intern prepared a new library research guide entitled “Cyprus: A Resource Guide.” The guide is now available in on our website. We currently have two spring interns working on new research guides.

The library receives frequent positive responses to our online research guides. Recently an NGO in Afghanistan commented on how useful they found our guide for that country.
Interest in the Middle East Institute’s Leadership Development Program continued to grow dramatically in 2006. MEI’s elite and respected internship program received an unprecedented 300 applications for the year and hosted 45 interns. Recruitment for the program has benefited from increased interest in language and regional studies courses, library resources, and in the region itself. Interns come from colleges and universities across the country and overseas, and each contributes to MEI’s mission to endow the next generation of Middle East experts with appreciation and respect for the peoples and culture of the Middle East. We continue to strive for diversity in the Leadership Development Program and have accepted students from a wide array of cultural and ethnic backgrounds, both from within the United States and abroad, including Israel, Iran, Syria, France, and Bulgaria.

Interns are assigned to various departments in the Institute for the spring, summer, and fall semesters; the internships last from three to four months. In 2006, interns in the Programs department researched speakers, provided logistical support at briefings, and assisted with MEI’s 60th Annual Conference. Interns in the Publications department compiled The Middle East Journal’s Chronology, wrote book annotations, and assisted in editing projects. Communications department interns edited press releases and op-eds and covered congressional hearings. MEI also hosted interns in the Development department, where interns learned about fundraising in a non-profit context, and in the Public Policy Center, where graduate-level interns acted as research assistants for our Scholars-in-Residence. All interns attended MEI-hosted events and lectures and wrote policy briefs summarizing these conversations for publication and dissemination.
A number of MEI interns have stayed on or returned to the Washington, DC area to establish their careers, having developed contacts during their tenure at MEI. Our intern alumni occupy positions in Congress, the State and Defense Departments, academia, advocacy, think tanks, and in the corporate world.

INTERN DEVELOPMENT SERIES

Established in 2003, the Intern Development Series (IDS) is a vital part of the internship experience at MEI. The IDS consists of lectures given by MEI staff and outside Middle East experts to our interns, and reflects the Institute’s mission to promote better understanding of the Middle East. The IDS also serves to prepare the next generation of leaders by giving interns a window into the variety of professional opportunities available to them. Interns play an active role in the series by suggesting topics for discussion and assembling background reading. In 2006 the IDS took interns to the Brookings Institution, National Geographic, the Islamic Center, the Washington office of Radio Free Europe, the Arab-American Anti Discrimination Committee, and the corporate office of Boeing. Interns also met with intelligence experts, academics, NGOs, and professionals from the State and Defense Departments.

Public Policy Center

MEI’s Public Policy Center continued to be a core strength of the Institute’s face to the world in 2006. MEI scholars are much in demand to sort out the complex and often-contradictory issues facing the Middle East today. MEI’s 29 scholars have well-established reputations for honest, balanced assessments.

Throughout the year, MEI scholars provided more than 20 op-eds that were published in leading US newspapers, such as the Baltimore Sun, Boston Globe, Forward, Houston Chronicle, International Herald Tribune, Miami Herald, Newark Star Ledger, San Diego Union, Salt Lake City Tribune, Atlanta Journal-constitution, McClatchy News chain, and the Washington Examiner. They contributed 35 Perspectives that are accessible on the website for public reference.

In 2006, Adjunct Scholar Andrea Rugh authored The Political Culture of Leadership in the United Arab Emirates and Language Department Chair Shukri Abed wrote Focus on Contemporary Arabic: Conversations with Na-
MEI senior staff and scholars had a large number of speaking engagements, lectures, and briefings with local media across the United States, Canada, and Europe — including California, Florida, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, Virginia, Wisconsin, Britain, and Italy. Several also traveled to the Middle East, from Afghanistan to Morocco, to participate in conferences and met with key regional officials. Host institutions or sponsors covered nearly all of the travel expenses.

MEI Vice President David Mack, Adjunct Scholar Wayne White, and other MEI members also were called upon to lend their expertise to the Congressionally-mandated Iraq Study Group’s effort to examine alternative strategies for resolving the Iraqi conflict. Ambassador Mack, former MEI President Edward S. Walker, and other MEI scholars also testified and briefed Congressional members and staffers on a variety of Middle East issues and countries, including Iraq, Libya, the UAE, and Oman.

The most recent additions to the Public Policy Center include Roby Barrett, an adjunct professor at Texas A&M and President of C.COMM consulting firm. He has also taught at Northern Virginia Community College and served in the Foreign Service from 1978–1984, focusing on the Middle East. Mishkat Al-Moumin is a former law professor at Baghdad University and Environment Minister in the 2004-2005 Iraq government. She has set up Iraqi NGOs dealing with women’s rights and the environmental concerns of marshlands. Abdallah Schleiffer will join the ranks of adjunct scholars after completing his assignment as Washington Bureau Chief for Al Arabiya TV. He formerly ran and taught at the communications department of the American University of Cairo after three decades working in the Middle East for US media.

MEI adjunct scholar Mohamed Khalil returned to Khartoum, Sudan in 2006 to resume a law practice and provide support for a new political party being formed there. He also contributed to successful efforts to gain the release of a National Geographic reporter.
Communications

MEI’s reputation for reliable and balanced analysis and commentary on news developments in the Middle East steadily grows. MEI fielded more than 3,000 media inquiries on a wide range of issues during 2006. More than 700 inquiries came from publications or broadcasters from the Middle East, Europe, Canada, Asia, and Latin America. The 24/7 availability of the Communications Department to field media queries and coordinate expert responses has been key to tapping into MEI’s reservoir of experience.

MEI was cited in more than 2,000 articles in the print media, including the leading US, European, and regional newspapers. During the Lebanon-Israel crisis in July and August, for example, MEI analysts were able to reach a global readership of over 66 million. MEI received more than 300 media queries that resulted in over 350 newspaper citations and television and radio interviews during the conflict.

MEI scholars also have appeared in a variety of domestic and international television, radio, print and internet outlets, including Al Jazeera, Al Arabiya, Al Hayat, An Nahar, Associated Press, BBC, CBC, CNN, Boston Globe, Chicago Tribune, Daily Star, Financial Times, Fox News, New York Times, Newsweek, NPR, Reuters, Time, Voice of America, Washington Post, and Zaman. MEI also has been cited in a host of smaller papers throughout the US that rely on AP, McClatchy news service, Reuters, Agence France-Presse, and UPI news agencies where we have good working relationships.

MEI worked with broadcast conglomerates that put together news packets and shared them with their local affiliates, providing smaller markets with in-depth analyses. BBC contacted MEI more than 200 times during the year for commentary and analysis. CNN was a close second. We also have developed a close working relationship with Al Jazeera (both Arabic and English channels) and Al Arabiya TV.

MEI cultivated C-SPAN coverage of MEI events, which resulted in national exposure for several MEI programs. A special program on peacekeeping in Lebanon, which featured Vice President David Mack and Adjunct Scholar Arthur Hughes, was carried on C-SPAN and repeated several times, as was an MEI panel on the results of the Iraq Study Group. C-SPAN also broadcast the opening day of MEI’s 60th Annual Conference. AP-TV covered both days of the conference to use excerpts in reports for its US and Middle East clients.

To celebrate MEI’s 60th anniversary, the Communications Department developed a slideshow presentation for the Annual Conference using historic photos and commentaries by MEI scholars to highlight the most significant events and personalities of the Middle East during the past six decades.

The Communications Department regularly sends out emails to the 1,500 journalists, embassy staff, and other professionals subscribing to our list-serve with up-to-date information about MEI events, recent Perspectives, transcripts, manuscripts, and other relevant news.

Our “Resource Alerts,” which are sent to journalists during breaking news events, continue to get very positive feedback. This service provides journalists on deadline with a list of appropriate MEI scholars who can respond to their needs.

MEI continued its effort to reach “beyond the beltway” within our limited financial resources by rapid email transmission of Policy Briefs summarizing public programs at MEI and by promoting its video conference capabilities. We have targeted US universities, World Affairs councils, and Middle East venues in a cost-effective way. Trial links with the University of Texas and Portland State University proved successful.

The MEI website is a “go to” source for many users around the world. Communications and Outreach worked closely with MEI’s IT staff to prepare for updating and improving the website. The Boardman room’s audio capability has been improved both for sound and recording of events to be used later for podcasting, a potential additional source of revenue.

To better promote the library and our scholars at MEI events, we initiated the practice of providing selected reading lists based on Library holdings and CDs of past MEJ articles (for sale) as well as pertinent scholar perspectives on subjects covered in the lectures. This has encouraged attendees to visit the library and consider membership to take advantage of all that MEI has to offer.
